Introduction

“I want you to go on this trip with me.” There are limits on how often I can say this to my wife. She doesn’t like to travel, but we have a standing agreement. She will go with me on any trip as long as I tell her it is important to me. So as soon as the words left my mouth, she stopped, turned, and looked at me. It was now time for me to quickly give my reasons. “Somehow I think what I learn on this trip will greatly influence the rest of our lives. I want you there to hear it firsthand.”

We packed the car and headed for Fort Worth, Texas. It was January 2003, the month that Moody Publishers released my book, The Art of Storytelling. But I wasn’t going to Texas to conduct a training in storytelling. I was going to receive training in storytelling. J.O. Terry and Grant Lovejoy were conducting a seminar on Chronological Bible Storying. They were teaching a concept that was totally new to me. I have taught thousands of people how to embellish Bible stories so they can put their lessons inside the telling of a story. I have also trained people on how to increase their personal storytelling skills. But this was different. We were being taught how to craft and tell Bible stories that were completely accurate to Scripture, with nothing added to “spice it up.” Our instructors were saying that a person doesn’t have to be good at telling stories to be successful at this. This was the first time I heard that 75% of the Bible is written in a story format. They said God had it written this way to make it easier for people to learn, remember, and share with others. When I asked about the other 25%, I was surprised to learn that 15% of the Bible is in some form of poetry, and only 10% is in analytical reasoning. We soon found that almost everyone else in attendance at this training was a missionary to a foreign country. They were there to learn this new approach used by missionaries around the world. They called it “chronological storying.”

That week of training changed our direction in life. I went home and started to experiment with storying. Soon I became friends with Dr. Mark Getz, a rheumatologist. He had been interested in chronological storying for several years. He said, “Would you like a class of adults to experiment with?” This started a 15-week venture. I traveled to his church in Morton, IL each Sunday and taught 35 adults a story a week. After 10 weeks, I asked the class, “Why do you come back week after week?” One man said, “John, you are teaching us stories that our pastor assumes we already know.” After the 15 weeks, I continued crafting the stories, and Mark taught the class until they had learned to tell 72 stories – 36 from the Old Testament and 36 from the Life of Christ. I tried teaching the process to churches in the US, but they found it totally different from anything they knew. To them, “Bible stories are for children! Adults need solid teaching.”

Immediately, doors started opening in other countries. Missionaries and national Christian leaders were eager to learn more about BibleTelling, and how it would help them reach and teach the people in their countries. Unlike the churches in the United States, they were excited about this new tool. Still, I knew my mission field was the USA, where “storying” was not yet being accepted. God used this time to teach me more about storying, and how it can be used in ministry. J.O. Terry tried to encourage me by reassuring me that eventually American churches would wake up to this tremendous tool. Now, a few years later, I see churches changing. Pastors have been hearing about what is happening on the mission fields of the world. They suddenly realize how little of the Word of God their people really know. Church leaders are coming to the realization that sound reasoning helps people form good doctrine, but knowing the stories of the Bible helps them make good decisions. Our churches are in crisis because they are full of people with good doctrine who make bad decisions!

How the Stories are Crafted and Arranged

So, welcome to BibleTelling! Our book All the Stories of the Bible has 255 Bible stories, which cover all the main events of the Bible. Let's start by examining how the stories were crafted.

- Each story is accurate to Scripture. Nothing has been added to embellish what is given in the Bible.
- Each story is basically the simple telling of a Biblical event. Everything has been removed that distracts from the simple understanding of the story.
- If a story is too small for our purposes, it is grouped together with another event (or several events) to make a larger combined story. A story is often left out if it is only one or two sentences long.
- If a story is too long for our purposes, it is broken into two or three smaller stories. This is for ease of reading and telling.
- Each event appears only once in this book, even if it is found two or more times in the Bible. We compile them together into one story.
- The stories do not follow all the rules of writing. Much effort is given to putting the story in a conversational style. This makes it easier to understand when it is being read aloud. It also makes it easier for a person to learn to tell the story.
- Stories are between 3-10 minutes in length (average telling or reading speed). Most of them are about 5 minutes long.
- Nothing in the story is left out because of offensive content. Therefore this icon  is used as a precaution for parents and teachers. This icon indicates a story has material you may find objectionable for younger children. We recommend you personally read the story before reading it aloud to children.

- You can download all the written versions of these stories at no cost. This material may be printed if it is going to be distributed free within your ministry. Please give the acknowledgment "Story crafted by John Walsh."
- Contact the author for permission if you wish to print these stories for resale.
- We have asked several people to create added helps for these stories. These are people with various skills at using Bible stories in ministry. We hope to make their material available on our website at a very low cost.

Using Bible Stories

This User Guide focuses on The Bible Story Triangle to illustrate the basic principles of BibleTelling. It will also show you how to learn and tell a Bible story.

Before we move on, I need to make something clear. You can use Bible stories in your family and ministry without having to tell them by memory. These stories are crafted so you can easily read them to others. Our research shows that when the story is written in a conversational format, it makes no difference in ministry if you read a story to your audience or tell it to them.

Still, there are two things to keep in mind:

- 1) The requirement of quality is different in reading vs telling.
  - If you read the story, it must be done well. The process doesn't work if you stumble through the story. You must read it well. Go through the script several times and make sure it comes across smoothly.
  - If you tell the story, it doesn't matter how well you do it. You can tell it poorly, and the process still works. Actually, in some ways, it works better if the story is told without a lot of polish.

2) The impact on you personally is greater if you tell the stories. There is a tremendous spiritual advantage if you learn to tell the stories of Scripture. It impacts your life like few other activities. Christians around the world have taken a new interest in learning Bible stories. They have been surprised how it affects their spiritual walk with God and their ability to make right decisions. Most have noticed this after learning only ten stories.

Here are some principles that will help you “learn to tell Bible stories.”

Hiding God’s Word in Your Heart

“Hiding God’s word in your heart” is more than memorizing verses. Learning to tell the stories of the Bible is one way a person can easily learn Scripture and remember it for life. I’ll give you some easy steps on how to learn and remember stories without memorizing words.

Equipping for Ministry

There is another great advantage in learning Bible stories. It is the key for helping laypeople get involved in ministry. It takes years to become good at preaching. It takes unique skills to be a musician or part of a drama team. But with just a little effort, anyone can learn to tell stories and use them in ministry.

These are two great reasons to learn Bible stories – impacting your spiritual life and having a lifelong ministry. But where do you start? Here is The Bible Story Triangle. It will help you get started in learning Bible stories.

Bible Story Triangle

There are three points of a triangle, and lines between each point. I will deal with each of the points and each of the lines.

The Story Teller

Learn to respect the power of a Bible story simply told.

When I wrote the book, The Art of Storytelling (Moody Press), I taught the reader how to embellish Bible stories. This is a great tool in preaching and teaching. But telling a good embellished story is just like preaching a good sermon; it takes years of practice. That is why the book has been valuable to so many. In the past I would tell people that I embellished Bible stories so I can “bring the story to life.” I have since found that God’s stories are already “alive,” even without my help. I have discovered there is a power to telling the Bible story in its simplest format. This has nothing to do with skill, experience, or eloquence.

While I can tell you there is power in a story simply told, you have to experience that for yourself. The first time you see it, you will probably think it was just a particular situation or an unusually receptive person or crowd. You need to experience it several times before you come to appreciate that the power is not in your abilities and skill. The power is in the story, because it is God's Story.

The Bible Story

Learn Bible stories that are accurate to Scripture, crafted in a conversational format.

A Conversational Format

For a story to be read aloud or told, it must “flow off the tongue” as you would do in a conversation about any other event in life. You will notice the stories in this book do not follow conventional rules of writing. For instance, there is an overabundance of contractions. “You will” becomes “you’ll”. “They are” becomes “they’re.” This is because “that’s” how people talk in a normal conversation.

You may hear someone say this in a conversation. “A person needs to know what they’re talking about” instead of “what he/she is talking about.” Again, this is a part of normal conversation for those who speak the English language.

Adding to the Story

The Bible stories must be crafted so they are at least 95% accurate, but they should still be communicated in your own words. By saying this, many will immediately ask about the 5% that is not in Scripture.

The Bible is full of “assumed knowledge.” This is natural in any story. When writing or telling a story, you usually don’t include details that people already know about. For instance, if I tell a story that included a man going to a gas station, I wouldn’t go into great detail about exactly how he got the gas into his car. People already know how that is done, and they would be bored if I started to describe it. But that may not be the case if that same story is told 2,000 years from now. People may not know how it was done.

So it is with the Bible. It is constantly referring to things that happen in everyday life. It is assumed that the reader knows about these things. But today, we live from 2,000 to 4,000, to 6,000 years after the stories were written. Usually these bits of assumed knowledge have little importance to a person reading the Bible. That’s not always true when you tell the story. Adding a small amount of “assumed knowledge” information may make the story much clearer and help to avoid misunderstanding. For instance, in the story of the Good Samaritan, the Bible simply refers to the Samaritan. I have added the fact that Samaritans were a group of people who were hated by the Jews. There is more assumed knowledge that could be added about Samaritans, but only this piece of information is relevant to the story.

Leaving Things Out

Many times it is best to remove information from the story. Information is removed if it distracts from the simple understanding of what happened. One illustration are the stories written by scribes. It was not their purpose to give a clear understanding of the events involved. They were to record historic happenings for the purpose of establishing official documents. With this in mind, they would include all the names of everyone involved and who their parents and grandparents were.

This amount of detail should not be included in a conversational story. When you listen to someone tell a story, you can only keep track of a limited number of small details. For instance, the story becomes confusing to most people if they hear more than three proper names given. Therefore the storyteller must decide which three proper names to use, and which ones to leave out. Note: These do not include names that are commonly known, like Abraham, Israel, Jesus, and Paul.

Connecting the points

The Story Listener

People will remember Scripture longer if you give it to them in story form.

As we discussed earlier, 75% of the Bible is written in a story format. God wrote it this way because He created people. He knows they will receive truth quicker and easier if it is given as a story, a poem, or a song. He also knows that people will remember Scripture longer if they get it in one of these formats.

We have come through a time in history where pastors and Bible teachers have become good at using analytical logic to explain Scripture. Even though only 10% of Scripture is written this way, the entire Bible has now been completely outlined – several times! All that the Bible teaches has been captured and put it into a system so it can be understood analytically. All of this is good scholarship and important for study. Unfortunately the general population of the world doesn't think that way any more – and some never did. They respond best when given the Scripture the way it was written – in a story, poem, or song.

Studies are now showing that Bible storytelling is a superior way to prepare people for ministry. Analytical logic shouldn't be ignored, but it should be balanced out with a strong foundation of knowing the stories of the Bible and being able to tell them.

There is a natural tendency to listen to a story.

The Natural Tendency to Listen to a Story

A few years ago, I was in the children's section of my local library looking for a story for a children's program I was hired to conduct. The librarians were accustomed to seeing this big man sitting on those little chairs at those little tables. Off in the corner of the room was the typical scene of a librarian reading a book to 15 wide-eyed children. They sat on the floor around her not saying a word, totally lost in their imagination. Behind the children were several rows of bookshelves. A man was standing in the first row, and he had only one shelf of books between him and the librarian reading the story. Obviously he had gone there to look for a book when "the story grabbed him." His body was standing there, but his mind was with those children in the world of imagination.

He suddenly realized what he was doing. He became embarrassed at being hooked by a story crafted for preschoolers. He quickly looked around to see if anyone was watching him. And of course, there was – me. To break the power that story was having on him, he had to move from that row and get far enough away so he could not hear her.

People who don't want to listen to a story have to fight the urge when one is being told.

Some people resist listening to stories as they get older. They throw up a wall of resistance when they know a story is coming their way. I have learned how to get around their resistance. The key is not to warn them you are about to tell a story. Try not to say these words. “That reminds me of a story,” “Let me tell you a story,” or “That reminds me of a time when...”

In a conversation, never warn people you are about to tell a story. Use this simple technique. Stop mid-sentence, pause, look like you are thinking for a brief second, and then start telling an event that relates to what we were talking about. Once the story starts, people will listen to it.

Telling a Story Poorly

The fear of telling a story poorly has kept many people from telling Bible stories. You may think that I am going to try to encourage you by saying, “I’m sure you’re better than you think. You probably don’t tell stories poorly.”

But that’s not true. You do tell stories poorly – especially the first few times you tell them. We all do. This is key in developing storytelling skills and using stories in ministry. If you aren’t willing to tell stories poorly, you won’t tell them at all. This is one of the big differences between people who seem to have a natural ability to tell stories and those who don’t think they are good at it. The first group is willing to tell a story and stumble through it.

The 5-Time Rule

The 5-time rule is the secret they aren’t telling you. A story doesn’t become good until the teller has told it to other people five times. When you tell it the first time, you start it wrong. You stumble through it. You forget part of it. And then you leave it hanging at the end. That’s just the way it is. No wonder people avoid telling stories! It’s important to forget part of a story when you first tell it. Once you do that, you’ll never forget it again. That part of the story becomes burned into your memory.

On to the second telling of your story. Things have greatly improved this time. You figure out a better way to start it. You remember the parts you forgot the last time, but you forget other parts (good for you). The ending is still not smooth, but much better (story endings are hard). But the main thing is that you are starting to notice how people are reacting to the story. It is becoming clear what parts keep their interest and what parts make their mind wander.

The third time, the story is starting to take shape. The biggest problem with this telling is you are still thinking about the content of the story and it’s not simply flowing out of you. By the fifth telling of a story you should have it flowing out of you. Without thinking about how you did it, the story has a better appeal for your listener. You now have a story you can tell for the rest of your life.

Oh, one more thing. People may start saying that you have a natural gift for storytelling.

REQUIREMENT: Learn to tell stories without memorizing words.

The attendance of our Sunday morning church service is between 800 to 900 people. We have a wonderful pastor who does a great job preaching a sermon. After one of his great sermons, very few people in the audience say, “Oh, I could do that. I can preach a sermon that good.” Oh no. Few people would say that because they know it takes education, training, and experience to become good at preaching.

Telling a story is different. All of us have a natural ability to tell a story. Yes, some are better than others, but still, we all tell stories all day every day. It is natural, easy, and it’s how we communicate with others.

For instance, imagine that after one of those great sermons, I start to leave the auditorium when I see my good friend. I say to him, “Steve, how did that fishing trip go?”

“Hi John. Hey, it was great! As soon as I got there, I...”

Now I may have listened to that great sermon – one that was a result of education, training, experience, study, and preparation – but there’s a good chance I won’t remember it the next day. Now I am “all ears” as I listen to Steve tell me about his fishing trip. And for the next week I’ll remember exactly what he said. Steve is not a professional storyteller. He isn’t telling this story because of his educational background. He isn’t using notes to make sure he gets it straight. He hasn’t memorized his lines, and he isn’t worried about forgetting something. No, he is simply telling me about an event. If he did forget something, I’m sure the next time I see him, he’ll say, “Oh John. I forget to tell you...”

Herein is the key to that line between the storyteller and the story. Learn to tell a Bible story without memorizing words. You should tell it as naturally as Steve told me about his fishing trip.

Example of Conversational Storytelling

You must first learn the story in a conversational style. This is how you would tell it to a friend at work. Possibly he says to you, “Say, you go to church. Maybe you can clear something up for me. I heard someone talking about the Bible the other day. He said something about a man who wanted to find a wife for his son, so he sent one of his servants to go get one. I don’t know. Maybe I’m getting it all wrong. Do you know of a story like that?”

Well, it happens that you were reading my book All the Stories of the Bible and you had read #17 the day before. So you say, “Sure, I know that story. I was just reading it the other day. It’s called Rebekah.”

“Yeah, that’s the one. How does that story go?”

In that situation, you wouldn’t rush home and memorize every word in the story. You wouldn’t set up a stage at the work place with microphones and lights. You wouldn’t dress up in costume and perform the story. You would simply tell him the story in about two minutes, hitting all of the highlights as you remembered them. That is conversational storytelling, and that is how most Bible stories are told.

Memorizing

It is important to learn a story without memorizing the words of the story. There are several reasons:

Memorizing will limit the number of stories you’ll learn. The objective is to be familiar with all the stories of the Bible and let them flow out of you to help others. Memorizing makes this difficult and tedious.

If you memorize the story, your presentation will tend to be stiff, not spontaneous. Telling a Bible story should be like telling what you ate for breakfast. You should see the story in your mind and tell what you see.

Memorizing a story means you are more likely to forget it. It is hard to retain things that have been memorized. But you can remember a story a long time if you picture it in your mind without trying to memorize the words.

If you memorize the story, you will find that people will look at you like they look at their pastor. They’ll say, “Oh, I could never do that.” You may be one of those people who find it easier to memorize a story. This ability is admired by others, but rarely do they feel inspired to copy what you do.

Your road to learning Bible stories starts with developing the ability to “see the story” and tell others what you see. Learn to tell the story in its simplest form. You can do this with most Bible stories by simply reading it a few times. If the story is harder, you may have to use some of the tools in the next section.

“Storyboards”

A film producer will put together a storyboard in order to get an overview of the entire story or some part of the story. The script is in words, but the storyboard is in pictures. This is the same method a BibleTeller uses to envision the entire story or one part of it. People use many different types of storyboards according to their personality and preference. Each person needs to find the one that fits them best.

A friend of mine prefers drawing stick figures in a way that helps him remember how the story goes. Once he has drawn this out, he can easily tell the story.

My daughter rehearses the story while walking around a room. She places the various happenings of the story in different places in the room. Once it's all in place, she walks around the room telling the story. After that, she can easily tell the story anywhere in the world. But as she tells it, she is mentally back in that room.

I often will use hand gestures to help me remember certain difficult parts of a story, like a list or a conversation.

Find a method that works for you.

- Start by selecting a story that seems easy to learn.
- Read it a few times.
- Tell it to yourself without looking at the written version.
- Read it again and identify the difficult areas.
- Think of some hand gestures or drawings that would help you remember that section.

“Stumble through the story” with someone else. Don't be discouraged if you forget a part of the story. Remember, forgetting part of the story is important because you won't forget the same section twice.

Now, be determined to tell the story four more times. Once you have told a story five times, you will remember it for the rest of your life.

I encourage you to start learning Bible stories on a regular basis.

Learn one story a week.

Select “designated listeners.” Recruit five people (or five groups of people) who will make themselves available to listen to your weekly story. You will be surprised how quickly people will agree to be one of your five listeners. People love hearing stories.

Find a reason to learn the story. I call this “the principle of the end user.” You'll be more dedicated to learning the stories if you know the stories are not for your own personal benefit. You'll learn one story a week if you can find a person or a group who needs to hear them. This is key. Find some use for these stories in ministry.

The work of the Holy Spirit is to apply the story to the life of the listener.

REQUIREMENT: Learn to trust the power of a Bible story without added comments.

The Bible Story Triangle has one line that doesn't involve the storyteller. It is the line between the story and the listener. As a BibleTeller, you select the story and control how you tell it. You can select the listener and control what story you will tell them. But that is as far as your control goes. You can't control what effect the story will have on the listener.

You can try to control what they learn from the story, but it won't work. They will learn what the Holy Spirit wants them to learn. You select the story and the listener, but the Holy Spirit selects what they learn from it.

The older I get, the more I realize that the Word of God is not dependent on my added comments. A missionary asked me, “But what if they don't get the point of the story?” I replied simply, “The story is the point.”

Preaching

A pastor asked me, “Are you saying I shouldn't preach and show people how to apply the story to their lives?” No, that isn't what I'm saying. Pastors are trained and have developed the skill to explain the Scripture. The Holy Spirit will take their words and apply it to the hearts of the people. Still, pastors aren't surprised when the Holy Spirit uses the sermon text in a different way than the pastor intended. In fact, they know that this is what often happens.

I was questioned about this by a pastor who attended one of my trainings. I answered him by saying, "I'm sure you carefully give your people the points they should be learning from the Bible story. That's good, but I hate to tell you – they aren't getting it!" He was shocked. The thing is, no matter how well you explain the Scriptures, it is the Holy Spirit who is doing the teaching. People won't always understand what you're saying, and usually won't remember it, but they'll never forget what the Holy Spirit teaches them.

Later, during a break, some of the pastor's parishioners spoke to me in low tones. "John, we were shocked when you told Pastor Dave that. But we're so glad you did. He's a wonderful man, but you're right. We don't get it when he gives us his points."

Work of the Holy Spirit

The purpose of this section is not to discourage pastors, but to encourage those who are not pastors. You don't need to understand everything there is in the Bible to be used by the Holy Spirit. Learn the stories and tell them. You don't have to be able to explain them. God's Spirit will take God's Word and apply it to those who hear it.

It is amazing what happens when people are allowed to discover "on their own" what a Bible story teaches. Many times Jesus explained the Scriptures to his disciples. But other times he simply told the story and let the Holy Spirit bring the truth home to the listeners. We need to get back to using both of these approaches.

Using Bible Stories in Ministry

This User Guide gives the theory behind BibleTelling, and encourages you to learn the stories. Our website will provide other tools and instructions on how to use Bible stories in various ways. Hopefully, there will be a growing number of helps as more people share their expertise in using Bible stories.
